Botanical Art Worldwide

America's Flora

Spotlighting the ephemeral beauty and variety of plant life, America's Flora is part of a global initiative focused on the manifold ways the lives of plants and people are intertwined. From the West Coast's pioneer violet, the Southwest's saguaro cactus, and sunflowers spanning the Midwest to the Southeast's iconic longleaf pine, America's Flora considers native plants. The variety of North American flora, both familiar and rare, is meticulously depicted in watercolor and other mediums. Curated by the American Society of Botanical Artists and the United States Botanic Garden, the exhibition is part of a worldwide project emphasizing the importance of conserving botanical diversity, increasing appreciation of the world's plants, and linking people with plants via botanical art.

Flora, Fauna, Font

Illustrating the Alphabet

Kandis Vermeer Phillips' illuminated alphabet showcases A to Z adorned with plants, mammals, and insects. Phillips integrated extensive research into the history of medieval illuminated manuscripts into an alphabet primer for her granddaughter. She combined decorative letters with representations of flowers and creatures found in her garden and during family travels.
